Scouting teaches so much that's relevant to today's young people, including environmental stewardship, leadership, and service to others and our community. And, they get outside and learn skills that boost confidence and leadership.

My son has been in the troop for two years now -- he's gained so much from the experience, and we have seen how it's translated to increased self-confidence, skills, and motivation during these challenging times. He's built and launched rockets; made a bow, quiver, and arrows and learned archery; visited a B-16 airplane being reconstructed; learned knife, axe, and saw safety and first aid skills; done community service; and gone winter tent camping.

Plus, you never know which of those 135+ merit badges might lead to a career path (Entrepreneurship, Engineering), real-life skills (Public Speaking, Plumbing) or a lifelong hobby (Collections, Geocaching, Chess) Or, maybe even an Academy Award (Steven Spielberg made his very first film, Gunsmog for his Photography merit badge -- he later earned an Academy Award for Saving Private Ryan).
